

look out øya.

a stair.

Embracing the park, looking over new experiences. Our goal is to design a sensible space that emphasises the role that nature can play in the city and commemorates the Oya festival, as well as creating opportunities to experience these in new and diverse ways.

The structure is built into two major sections: The triangular top is elevated above the tree-tops to create a landmark in its environment and acting as a viewpoint for the park, the festival and the city skyline. The base is infused with the hill and the pavilion creates a peaceful space that resembles a garden maze, where we aim to incorporate an exhibition area promoting environmental awareness. The entire structure will be built from wood highlighting the ecological link with nature and embracing Norwegian heritage.

The elements of this structure combined will look to be a beacon of experiences in the park and the festival, while promoting spaces for contemplation, celebrating social connectivity and connecting the people and the city of Oslo with nature look me up!
