The concrete steps, like perforations on a wall, are portals into the unknown vacancy

Space. . .

This innately formless vapour is a boundless entity whose immortality conceives architecture. It is both within us and without. This particular nature of space, elucidates what it truly is. The act of defining it entirely Sisyphean, despite it communicating the incomprehensible. Space is not a sphere or a cube: it is the sphere and the cube. Without space we would not marvel at the Duomo. Without space, piazzas would be nugatory vacancies! Let a house or architecture, extol the nature of this amorphous material substance, in a world where both program and site are non-existent. Water becomes the continuity of space beneath us. . . glass becomes the invisible boundary to which we can perceive the immortality and embrace spatial infinity. What was once definite, becomes without. What was once of form, is now infinite.
