

---

Architecture in a pure and fundamental optic is a tool to define the space surrounding us. It is not creating it, just defining it, giving to human answers and optical limits; it is offering a limit to the unlimited, a shape to the undefined, an answer to a question. All this can be represented by a basic and elementary shape as the circle: in fact it is expressing the pureness and simplicity hiding behind Architecture but it is also showing that complexity and mystery are fundamentals of it. So in a hypothetical plan the shape could be a circle in which people, entering, discover the defined space. In a section it could instead represent the relation that Architecture and House are having. House is protection, is closure and opening at the same time, is answer to a need but is also pursuit between ground and sky that thanks to architecture is for human something tangible.

---

