

SAREK

FREE

Without a starting point and without a site you are free to imagine anything. Free from limitations and demands. But does something belong if it wasn't intended for anything in particular?

Protruding from the ground, like a giant rhinoceros with a box caught on its horn; the building hangs above the ground with a small footprint. This makes it possible to place in multiple different situations.

When entering from the stairs in the back, you are faced by a light room that opens up, giving an extraordinary view, given that the right home is found for your house.

Everything has its own place, whether or not you intended it too in the beginning. This buildings home might just be in Sarek.

