

A LAND OF NO ONE

= international waters/free sea

64% of the ocean is considered international waters/free sea, thus revealing that 45% of earth surfaces is free of any nation political jurisdiction or programmatic concerns.

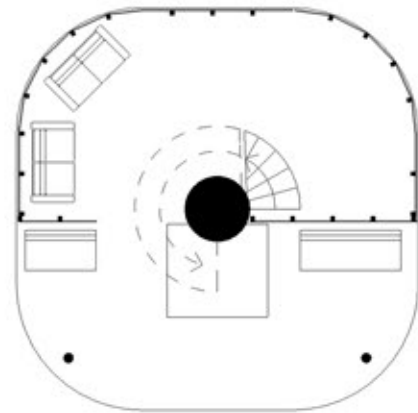

A Land of No One

We think that the only possibility for a house to stand without the behalf of other interests except the spatial qualities itself is for it to stand on the land free of the political, programmatic, or economic concerns themselves.

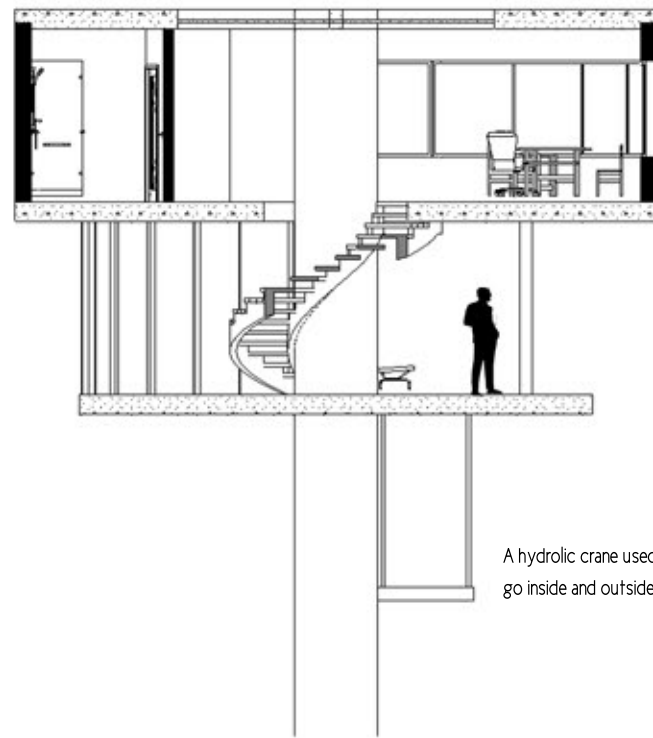

Even though every single region now has its own regulation for a house to stand, fortunately we still have quiet large areas that not any single nation can touch. Those referred areas are actually no land - but water - and in fact covered 45% of our earth surfaces.

The so called international waters or free sea - which we use here as an instance of free land - lie beyond the internal waters, territorial waters and exclusive economic zones, thus causing them totally untouchable by any form of regulation or jurisdiction of any nation.

We view that a house standing on international waters area would be the only way for it to fully express its spatial purpose, generating a new form of unrestrained building, and finally, creating a space where architecture purely live without any interests of intervention.

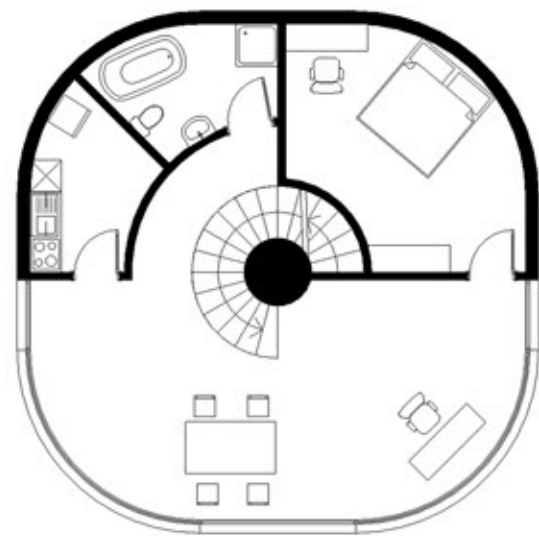

First Floor Plan

A hydraulic crane used for the user to go inside and outside the building.

Building Section

Second Floor Plan

The essence of the free house is built on a single large column which elevate the building several metres above the sea level, isolating it from the rising wave and the sea itself. There, on the free sea stand tall a simple building that express the desire of freedom, ignoring any circumstances of programmatic functions, and opening a new way of indefinite spatial forms development.