

THE FRAMES OF FORKLORE

A functional void, flexible to accommodate varying uses ranging from a common gathering place to a cafe, an open learning space to a library is the essence of the design. Equipped with minimal furniture, transformable windows serving as eating and reading tables, the double storeyed space adds imagination to fascinating world of a child. The louvered windows create a space transition from fully enveloped space in winters to an open space in summers. They facilitate entry of light with restricted air flow, air flow with controlled daylight, a complete enclosure or fully nature breathin space. The appeal lie in it's floating structure on stone diamond piers, combination of primary colors and geometries, ringed entry, bamboo swings, staircase swing and all the space to move around.

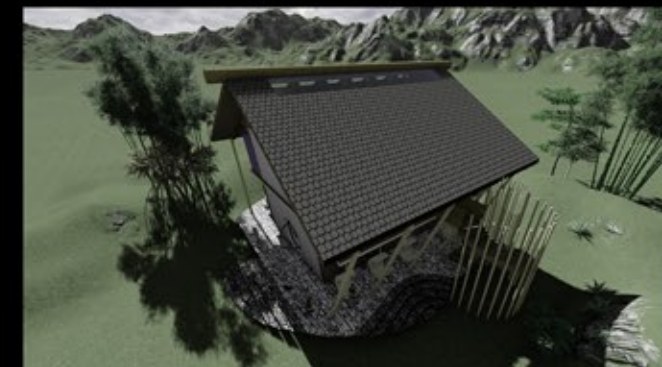

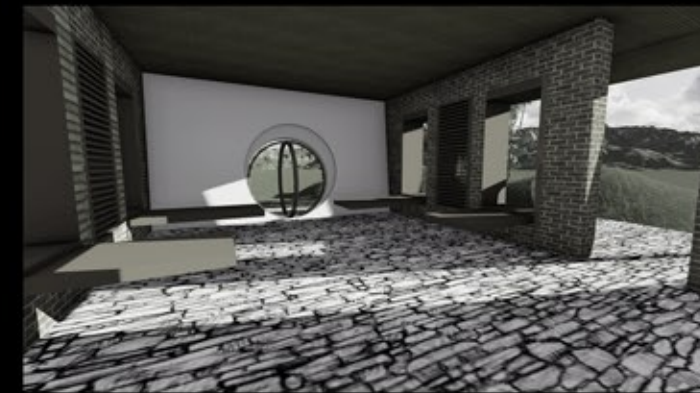

The idea was to concieve an economic and thermal comfort all the year round. this has been done by use of double roof, free standing walls, bamboo partitions and stone slabs. while roof and wall suffice ventilation, the materials bond locals to the building. The design approach generates local job oppurtunities, making use of local traditional skills to produce the best suited solution. expansive use of bamboo and timber allows for much needed insulation between 2 floors. The horizontol roof projection of ground floor further adds to the effect by restricting vertical transmission of sound. earth berms on site add to the effect by arresting surrounding noise.

Visual and psychic intergration has been evolved through use of a vertical slit that allows noise dissipation from canteen into exterior and at the same time creates a sense of caution amidst people sitting in cafe.

The design permits a visual intergration of 2 seperate activities and yet establish a physical connectivity.
