The perception of the world by people from the east is different from the perception of the world by Europeans or Americans. Otherwise we translate a world, responsibilities towards society and even ourselves. Very well these small yet significant differences are described in the book "The geography of thought" by R.E.Nisbett. And it is precisely this aspect of understanding, not the cost of building construction, is the hardest and most important in this project.

School is a place where we shape your worldview and learn to live in a community which is a product of our civilization. The library building is the intellectual output of the people. It is a unique building, where there is also material - young people, and the product - the thoughts and ideas of previous generations.

Architecture, like a society, is a collection of various qualities and character. Materials, for example wood, is soft, warm, gentle and at the same time stable. Stone is life, and nobility obtained with no no money, but hard work. This building is a symbiosis of these commonly available, natural materials and their characteristics. The structure is made entirely of wood. Roof sheathing, building foundation and exterior walls are made of stone on cement mortar. Light enters the building through windows and walls made from multiple layers of polycarbonate - in very cheap version, or by glazing - the more expensive version. In more expensive version you can also additionally insulate the building.

Cuboid with one higher wall opens up to the courtyard which is the stage of school life. The main room is an open, versatile space of the library and dining room. From the south-eastern side is the kitchen - the technical part. Out the building we go through covered terrace which is an extension of the function of the building. The walls inside are finished in wood, with the exception of the wall separating the kitchen from the hall, which is made of vertical white ceramic tiles. Bookcases are located between the poles. The main room is filled with furniture which allow to create any configuration of seats and tables for individual learning, the great feast or lesson with childrens.
